INFRASTRUCTURE AND REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT OPPORTUNITIES AMIDST THE GLOBAL ECONOMIC DOWNTURN

The worst financial crisis since the Great Depression has had an impact on all investors. Amidst this economic downturn has come opportunity for large, well-capitalized investors with a long investment horizon to seek attractive investments in infrastructure and real estate both in Canada and globally. Under today's market conditions, some investors are well positioned to capitalize on current, short-term market opportunities to acquire and hold high-quality infrastructure and real estate assets over the long term. These types of assets are an important long-term part of CPP Investment Board's investment strategy. In the 2009 Schulich Perspectives Lecture, David Denison will examine the state of global markets relative to infrastructure and real estate, and the role of these alternative asset classes within CPP Investment Board's portfolio. He will also outline the organization's unique advantages as a global investor.
